By plane

When flying to the UK, you are most likely to arrive at one of London's five airports, although there are direct international flights to many other cities.

Recently, many airports in southern England have added "London" to their names. Be aware that just because an airport has London in its name doesn't necessarily mean that it is near to, or easily accessible from London.

Inner/ more convenient airports to London:

London Heathrow Airport is the world's busiest international airport. Situated 15 miles/24 km west of Central London, Heathrow offers a large choice of international destinations, with direct flights to most countries in the world.

Heathrow is massive, and is comprised of 5 terminals, with different tube stops, so do realize which one you are flying from prior to arrival.

- London Gatwick Airport , 30 miles/50 km south of London in Sussex, is the second-largest airport.

It is important to note that the North and South terminal are some distance from each other, so check first which one you will be flying from before arrival to avoid missing a flight if rushing late.

- London City Airport is the most central airport in London, situated 7 miles east of Central London. It is easy to get to the centre of town or Canary Wharf. Due to the short runway and noise restrictions, the airport is restricted to small sized and regional jets. As a result, service is more or less limited to UK domestic and Western European destinations - primarily financial centres such as Frankfurt, Madrid, Paris, Zurich, etc.

By coach

International bus service runs from many cities. Good service is offered by Eurolines bus company and Student Agency. The journey takes about 20 hours. There are two ways how to get over The English Channel – either by ferry running between Calais and Dover (the ports with the shortest distance between), or under the sea bed through the tunnel.
